STILL STANDING. STILL SMILING

John Kriesel's story is one of the most powerful examples of resilience you'll ever bring to your audience. On December 2, 2006, a 200-pound IED in Iraq killed two of his closest friends and left him with life-threatening injuries, including the loss of both legs. He died three times on the operating table before doctors revived him, and he woke up eight days later at Walter Reed Army Medical Center to begin a long, uncertain recovery.

Told he'd likely never walk again; John defied every expectation. Nine months later, he walked out of Walter Reed on prosthetic legs. His comeback—fueled by positivity, humor, and an unshakable support system—has inspired audiences across the country.

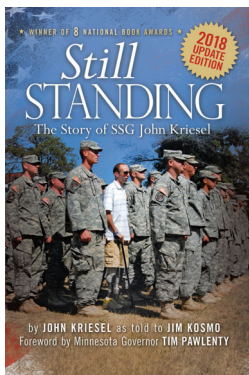

John went on to serve in the Minnesota House of Representatives, and today he is the Director of Veterans Services for a county in the Twin Cities metro, a part-time personality on KFAN Radio, and co-author of the award-winning book Still Standing.
